

MIGRATION REPORTS – OCTOBER 2015

OCTOBER 19, 2015

Birds! Late this week our first real front is forecast in the form of 15-20 mph winds, temps dipping into the high 50's (downright frigid up in Canada), with the prospect of prodigious amount of rain for an extended period of time. The potential exists from going from drought conditions to levee destroying floods (Middle & Nellie ponds) overnight. None-the-less we will continue to keep our pumps running to keep our veggies alive just in case this projected plume of deep, tropical weather fails to deliver. Attached to this front should be a major migration of waterfowl, a grand passage is on tap.
